

English for everyone!

English is now known by everyone, it is especially important for job activities and for the communication between people of different nationalities; it is necessary for those who love travelling and for those who want to work abroad. Most of the websites are in English.

English has established itself as a business language, as it is used by companies of global importance to get in touch. Many large Italian companies are based abroad, so knowing and being able to speak the language is fundamentally important.

In conclusion, having a good English knowledge implies jobs facilitations and the possibility of life long training.

English all around the world!!

English is both the official and secondary language of 70 countries

British English vs American English

It is difficult to clearly establish the difference between the English language and the American one: the United States and the United Kingdom, in fact, have numerous differences. Ex:

- A Texan and a New Yorker are both Americans but their accents are extremely different.
- A resident of London or Manchester or Glasgow are all British but pronunciation is different.

Despite this, it is possible to identify some very general differences, such as the fact that Americans pronounce all "r" while the English pronounce only those found at the beginning of words.

- Some words change the spelling from American English to British English. Ex: «Colore»; in American english says «color» while in British English says «colour»; the U in British English is pronounced while in the other case not.
- A lot of words,instead, change completely. Ex: College in Usa, University in England; soccer/football; vacation/holiday...

However the american slang influenced British culture through popular culture and the other way, as a result some of these differences are hardly noticeable today:

- For Ex. The use of prepositions in the phrases:

“ I’m going to a party on the weekend” in British English; “ I’m going to a party at the weekend” in American English.

Whatever pronunciation or spelling you will choose
Surely you will enjoy your English learning!!!!

